

Storyboards

Storyboards are used in the making of films and television programmes. They're drawn up before the film or programme is shot and they show how the action should end up looking on screen.

You're going to make a storyboard of your own for your homework. Imagine that you're a director and that you're going to turn a storybook into a film. The storybook you choose could be your reading book or any book you have at home.

Choose a section of your book and draw up a storyboard for it. You need to draw pictures of the main events that happen in the part of the book you've chosen and add captions underneath each picture to describe what is happening.
